

she get dolled up and get into the case as there was lots of money to be made. Mrs. Berry repeated the story to John Klein, farmer of Route #1, Box 31, Bound Brook, N.J. On the following Saturday night, before the Grand Jury met in Somerville, Mrs. Gibson visited Sipel's home just at dusk and said she thought she would see if he had changed his mind. She said: "Good, God, I don't understand you at all." Sipel says that his three sons and his farmhand, Julius Sennenberg were present and overheard part of what was said. D.T. 9/15/26

At the time of the original investigation 4 years ago New York "Evening Journal" reporters had Mrs. Gibson rehearse her story at numerous times and paid her on each occasion. One of the reporters induced her to go to prosecutor's office in New Brunswick to complain about thefts of her corn and that on same day that she was in office Mrs. Hall was there and Mrs. Gibson identified her.

A man named Roche, in the automobile tire business at 677 Montgomery St., Jersey City, has in his employ a man who says that he knew Mrs. Gibson for over a year in South Carolina about 10 years ago; that he visited her and had very intimate relations with her. He subsequently brought her to Pulatka, Fla., and that at that time she was known as Mrs. Latrasse and Mrs. Philopena. G.C. 9/17/26

John L. Totten of Middlebush, N.J., Tax Assessor for Franklin Township, states that he has no record of Gibson woman giving birth to a child since she has lived at her present address.
